Old art in a new light

If you think of the Campanile in Venice when you see the Old Town Hall in Passau, you're not entirely wrong, because the Old Town Hall on the banks of the Danube was built in Venetian style around 1405, but its origins go back to the 13th century. After the great fire of 1662, the city then lay in ruins and was largely rebuilt in Baroque style by the Italian master builders Lurago and Carlone.

They also designed the Large Council Chamber of the Town Hall with its elaborate stucco in the form of coffered panels and medallions. Decorated in the 19th century with historical mural paintings and stained glass windows, the hall is now mainly used for representative purposes, concerts and events.

Black anodised LED-Lucs 60 installed on the column capitals are used to illuminate the magnificent ceilings. Small and inconspicuous, they remain largely unnoticed, but have immense radiance and illuminate the works of art gently and energy-efficiently without UV components and with only little heat development.
